Angelbert condemned the horrific violence against men in the battle at Fontenoy. He wasn't a poet-moralist condemning from afar the ways of the world. He was a supporter of William the Pious's eldest son Lothar. Angelbert fought on the front line at Fontenoy: Fontenoy is what peasants call the water-spring and village

Fontenoy, Belgium. A French army of 50,000 under Marshal Saxe defeated a Pragmatic Army of 52,000, led by the Duke of Cumberland. Along with his son the Dauphin, Louis XV of France was present and thus technically in command, a fact later used to bolster the regime's prestige.
