“I went to work at Bluefield High School at about the time of real integration in this county. The 1954 Supreme Court decision outlawing segregation didn’t really play much in this county for eight or 10 years. Integration didn’t happen much until 1970, when I was working in the school board office,” he said during an interview this week.

The Greenbrier board of education had decided to return to segregated schools after a week's trial at integration. Three hundred students from White Sulphur Springs High School had protested integration by refusing to attend school. The board ordered black students to return to the schools they had attended during the 1953-54 school year.
