It is argued that feminist research is exclusively feminist because it is the feminist beliefs, motives, concerns and knowledge that act as the guiding framework to the whole research process. The methodology of feminist research differs from that of traditional social science researches on the basis of three reasons.

Feminist method - Wikipedia

In Feminist Methodologies for Critical Researchers, I analyze the hidden assumptions and limitations of both mainstream and feminist discourses about how best to do research and develop guidelines that take into account the workings of social power so as to minimize bias. I am in the beginning stages of a new project that examines the workings of the social institutions that organize the production of knowledge—the discipline and the academy.
