field that dries up or flowers that soon fade, the word of God stands forever. And despite the frailty of man and the inevitability of physical death, God's truth endures, which is a foundation upon which we can rest. But how are metaphors that our lives are "like dried up grass" or a "withered flower"...

The Measure of Our Days. Still, it is the patient who wages the real battle against illness, and Groopman shows us how each of his patients develops his or her own combat strategy: Kirk, the venture capitalist, approaches his cancer as aggressively as he would pursue a risky investment; Debbie, a follower of New Age philosophies,...
